Course description

This course serves as an introduction to politics in the United States. The course is broken into two parts. In the first half of the course, we will discuss the founding and the institutions that emerged from the Constitution. During the latter half of the semester, we will attempt to understand the public's role in American politics. At the completion of the course, students will be able to:

1. Demonstrate a basic understanding of U.S. politics
2. Participate knowledgeably in the American political process
3. Critically examine key concepts from political science

Assessment

Reaction Papers (20%) Two reaction papers are due throughout the course of the semester. These can be based on academic or civic events you attend, such as speakers on campus, or on academic journal articles. The subject should be cleared with me before writing the paper. I will distribute information about events and articles periodically throughout the semester. The papers should be no longer than two pages in length and should be submitted through Canvas.

- First reaction paper due: October 10, 2016
- Second reaction paper due: December 2, 2016

Canvas quizzes (10%) There will be weekly quizzes on canvas. You have two attempts to do these quizzes so if you're not satisfied with your first attempt you may retake it.

In-class quizzes: (20%) Quizzes will be in class and closed-note. They will not be announced beforehand, so always be prepared. You should expect roughly one quiz every two weeks. I will drop your lowest grade.

Exams (2): (50%) There will be two exams, one midway through the semester and the other at the end. They will be in-class and closed-note. The second will not cover material from the first.

- First exam: October 14, 2016
- Second exam: December 5, 2016

Course Policies

- Missing assignments: I do not let students make up assignments (quizzes or exams) barring exceptional circumstances. Let me know now if you have a conflict with one of the exams.
- I will make my slides available on the course website.
- You are expected to do the readings listed in the course schedule. The book we are using can be found here (American Government: Power and Purpose by Lowi et al, brief 13th edition), though there are cheaper copies available through other websites.
